Development Program Update

December 22, 2011

Taxilane S on opening day. Aircraft will use this taxilane to taxi into the new Tom Bradley International Terminal under construction and to transition to the north and south airfields
November 17, 2011

Glass curtain wall is now being installed in the south concourse gatehouses.
December 21, 2011

Gate 159 at the end of the south concourse. It is unique in that it is the only one that faces north north/south.

December 21, 2011

Most of the concrete on both decks of the south concourse has now been poured.
December 21, 2011

The crawler crane that lifted most of the steel for the core is getting boxed in. It will be lifted out of the pit by another crane on December 23 so the remaining steel can be set.
December 21, 2011

Work progressing on the core of the new terminal. The tall rectangular structure will be the large elevator/clock tower which will be easily visible throughout the “Great Hall”. 7

December 21, 2011

Utility work being done between the old and new concourses. Only an arm's length separates the new gatehouses from the old concourses thus the demolition of the old concourses will have to be extremely careful and precise.

December 21, 2011

Since Gate 134 will open in September 2012 in advance of opening the entire facility, a connector is being built to allow passengers access to the new terminal.

December 21, 2011

First concrete pour for the new Central Utility Plant took place on December 8.
December 19, 2011

The area with the rebar are the footings for the structural steel. Due to the weight of the building, some of the steel beams will actually be larger than the steel in Bradley West.

December 12, 2011
